Find Freedom of the Mountain in Everything You Do

BY LEO BABAUTA

In the last week, two separate men told me they fantasize about leaving everything behind and living on a mountain.

I can relate to this fantasy, because I've had it myself — live a simple life, away from the chaos and burden of this crazy world.

What we (and many others) crave is not really the mountain, but freedom. Simplicity and space and the liberating feeling of freedom.

We think if we simplify and let everything go and get our lives free of the burdens, we'll feel free.

But what I've found is that getting rid of everything and living a simple life doesn't necessarily give you that freedom. You'll find a way to experience life as burden and trapped. That's because we create the feeling of burden and trappedness for ourselves. It's not the external circumstances, but something we create with our minds.

A teacher a few years ago gifted me with a liberating idea: find the freedom in your current life, without having to change a thing.

And I've found that it's completely possible. And also that I forget to do it, a lot!

HOW TO CREATE A STRONG BRAND IDENTITY

An illustration showing multiple hands of different skin tones engaged in various tasks. Some hands are using tools like hammers, wrenches, and screwdrivers. Others are drawing on paper, holding a smartphone, or working with documents. There are also icons of gears, a calculator, a ruler, and a color palette. The overall theme is collaborative work and productivity.

Before you do anything else, you need to define your brand.

Humans are exposed to so many brand stories, the ones that have cut through are the ones we instantly understand.

We often talk about the elevator pitch to simplify complex thoughts. So imagine you're in an elevator trying to persuade someone to engage with your brand by answering these three questions:

What is your brand called?

What is your brand about?

What makes your brand different?
